

Northfield Laboratories are seen in relation to the city of Adelaide. The first new building—a two-storey laboratory—was completed in 1964 with financial help from the wheat industry. Trees and lawns were planted soon afterwards. They were followed by accommodation units, houses, sheds, glasshouses, and a dairy. This photograph, taken in 1976, shows a south-western view towards the city.